New Hampshire Bird Records

Vol. 18, No. 3

About the Cover

by Rebecca Suomala

A Black-throated Gray Warbler seen on Star Island on September 21 and 22 represents the first documented record for this species in New Hampshire. It was discovered feeding in the juniper trees by the cemetery on the southwest corner of the island and stayed within this small area. Despite our hopes and pleas, it never came close to our mist nets (see page 39), and, contrary to reports published elsewhere, we did not band it. Unfortunately, the New Hampshire Rare Bird Alert mistakenly reported that we had banded the bird, and this was picked up by others. I apologize for the confusion.

The Black-throated Gray Warbler is a western species that does not breed east of Colorado and New Mexico. It is a handsome black-and-white bird, similar to a Blackpoll Warbler but with a black bib and cheek patch and lovely gray back. The yellow spot between the bill and eye is tiny but diagnostic, if you can see it. We had ample opportunity to observe the bird on Star Island as it fed close by. A large sea swell cancelled all ferry boats, and when good weather arrived, the bird had departed. Those of us lucky enough to be already on the island were the only ones able to see this bird.

My photographs, while acceptable for documentation, were not of suitable quality for the cover of New Hampshire Bird Records – in anticipation of photographing birds in the hand, I did not bring a long lens with me to Star, and a photograph of a tiny spot was the sad result. Andrea Robbins has filled in the gap, as she has many times before for New Hampshire Bird Records, and we very much appreciate her cover illustration.

New Hampshire Bird Records (NHBR) is published quarterly by the Audubon Society of New Hampshire (ASNH). Bird sightings are submitted to ASNH and are edited for publication. A computerized printout of all sightings in a season is available for a fee. To order a printout, purchase back issues, or volunteer your observations for NHBR, please contact the Managing Editor at 224-9909.

Your Sightings Contribute Valuable Data

Birders who report their sightings to New Hampshire Bird Records contribute to more than just the publication. If your reports are not published, it is easy to think that they are not useful, but, in fact, they may be very important. Although we do not have room to publish every sighting, all reports are computerized and easily retrieved. These bird sightings are utilized by many projects.

Most recently, the New Hampshire Partners in Flight Committee has been working on the task of updating the bird portion of the New Hampshire threatened and endangered species list. A sub-committee is in the process of gathering information on a variety of species for potential discussion. New Hampshire Bird Records is the largest source of current bird sightings in the state since the New Hampshire Breeding Bird Atlas field work was completed in 1986. It is a tremendous resource, and we have generated many printouts of sightings for the committee.

We know more about birds than we do any other major group of animals, thanks to the regular reporters who are out in the field documenting what they see. New Hampshire birders should be proud of their contributions to this and other projects that utilize the valuable resource of New Hampshire Bird Records.

Becky Suomala Managing Editor, April 2000

What to Report

Fall Season: August through December

These are suggestions meant to be a guideline only to help reporters decide when they have a question on which sightings to report. Even though we do not publish all reports, each sighting is valuable in creating a picture of what is happening during the season. All sightings also become part of a database that provides information on bird distribution for research projects, endangered species reports, and other requests for data.

Always report any birds that are unusual for the state or the time of year. We recommend using A Checklist of the Birds of New Hampshire by Kimball C. Elkins as a reference (available at ASNH). For migrants, focus on arrival dates, peak numbers, late lingerers, inland sightings of ocean waterfowl, hawk flights, and shorebird peaks. For the common backyard residents that are present year round, report unusually high numbers or sightings which indicate a migration.

Spruce Grouse

Some species are sought after by many birders and reports of these are interesting to all – they are often resident species that are present but not commonly seen such as boreal species like Gray Jay and Spruce Grouse, owls and goatsuckers, or secretive wetland birds such as rails and bitterns. Reports of state endangered and threatened species are always valuable for the database.

Reports for the following species were received but not listed

Great Blue Heron	Downy Woodpecker	House Wren
Mallard	Hairy Woodpecker	American Robin
Ring-necked Pheasant	Pileated Woodpecker	Northern Mockingbird
Ruffed Grouse	Willow Flycatcher	Northern Cardinal
Rock Dove	Common Raven	Rose-breasted Grosbeak
Great Horned Owl	Black-capped Chickadee	Bobolink
Barred Owl	Tufted Titmouse	American Goldfinch
	Brown Creeper	House Sparrow

Sightings of the species listed above occurred in average numbers at expected locations, were discussed in the summaries, or are escaped exotics.

August 1 - November 30, 1999

The fall weather started in August with a continuation of the summer drought that left many lakes, ponds, and reservoirs in the state extremely low. This helped to produce some interesting inland shorebird sightings, including ten species on Mascoma

Lake in Enfield. In September, the muchneeded rain finally arrived, with two big storms. The first, on September 10, dropped 3-4" of rain on southern sections of the state, and then, a week later, the remains of Hurricane Floyd passed directly off the New Hampshire coast and brought more rain and strong east winds to the area. This helped to produce three species of shearwaters from Ragged Neck in Rye on September 17. The resulting cold front and strong northwest winds brought the biggest hawk flight in recorded history in New Hampshire with tremendous numbers of birds heading south on September 18 and 19. October was generally cool, with near-normal precipitation. November started with a strong storm with south-southeast winds on November 6. This, no doubt, pushed birds up from off Cape Ann and brought tremendous numbers of Greater Shearwaters and Northern Gannets close to shore. The fall ended on a warm note, with November temperatures nearly four degrees warmer than normal; however, there were relatively few noteworthy lingerers.

The tern restoration program out on White and Seavey Islands continued with tremendous success in the third year of the program. The final total for nesting terns was 141 pairs nesting with a phenomenal productivity of approximately 300 chicks fledged. This colony has gone from zero to 141 pairs in three years! Although they were not found nesting on the island, a pair of Roseate Terns and a pair of Arctic Terns were resident through the summer and into the fall.

On Star Island, Rebecca Suomala completed her first fall of bird-banding research on the island and contributed some of the most interesting sightings of the fall. Highlights included an incredible 31 banded Yellow-breasted Chats, a first documented record of Black-throated Gray Warbler, a Red Phalarope, a Lark Sparrow, and a Clay-colored Sparrow.

Other highlights for the fall include a Cory's Shearwater, three Lesser Black-backed Gulls, a Yellow-headed Blackbird, and record numbers of Greater Shearwaters, Broad-winged Hawks, Ospreys, and Merlins.

Loons Through Vultures

A l Delorey has made the sport of storm-watching for birds an exciting event, and there were several storms during the fall of 1999 that brought seabirds close enough to be seen from Ragged Neck in Rye. Rare finds included a Cory's and a Manx Shearwater on September 17, but November 3 was the day to be remembered at Ragged Neck. A strong coastal storm with strong southeast winds brought a count of 601 Greater Shearwaters along the coast, which certainly must be the highest total ever recorded in New Hampshire from land. It is not surprising that the season's high count of 530 Northern Gannets was counted from the coast on the same day.

American Bitterns continue to be a rare fall species with only four individuals reported for the fall, and a Tricolored Heron was discovered along the coast on August 8 and was the first fall report for this species since 1994. Snowy and Great Egrets that feed during the day along the New Hampshire coast during the summer and fall leave the state each evening to roost. One roost site is on Appledore Island at the Isles of Shoals in Maine, and the other is at Plum Island in Massachusetts. Good numbers of egrets were observed along the New Hampshire coast this season, and the evening flight to the roosts was well documented from Seabrook and Rye over several evenings this fall, with record numbers of Great and Snowy Egrets reported for the state. A Glossy Ibis flying over Concord, a Little Blue Heron in Enfield, and a Black-crowned Night Heron in Munroe were all unusual sightings away from the southern and coastal areas where these birds are normally seen.

Waterfowl & Hawks

Except for a migrating flock of 50 in Moultonborough, Snow Geese slipped through the state almost unnoticed last fall. American Wigeon numbers on Great Bay slipped a bit from the incredible growth they have seen in the previous five years; however, the four Eurasian Wigeon, (down from five last fall) remains a remarkable total for the state. Inland scoters were reported mostly from the Connecticut River valley. Ring-necked Ducks and Ruddy Ducks were reported in higher-than-average numbers from their traditional staging areas in southeastern New Hampshire. The incredible concentration of Common Mergansers reported the last three falls from Lake Umbagog was not reported again this fall; however, 310 Common Mergansers from Holderness on November 21 is a good total from the central part of the state. Rare waterfowl reports for the fall include a female Northern Shoveler mixed in with a flock of 300 dabbling ducks on Great Bay on the early date of August 23, and a female Barrow's Goldeneye seen along the coast on November 23.

September 18 and 19 proved to be an incredible weekend for hawk migration in New Hampshire. After the passage of a strong cold front on September 17, strong northwest winds pushed record numbers of Ospreys and Merlins down the coast. The northwest winds continued on September 19, and the Broad-winged Hawks poured over the top of Blue Job Mountain in Farmington. The 7,688 counted for the day is a record for the state. A strong cold front on November 7 with brisk northwest winds brought a late hawk migration along the coast, with 30 Red-tailed Hawks, three Northern Goshawks, and a dark morph Rough-legged Hawk all heading south.

Grouse Through Terns

Four hundred seventy-two Wild Turkeys were reported throughout the state for the fall, with a surprising abundance in the upper Connecticut River valley. The Sandhill Crane, first reported in the spring season, remained through the summer and was last reported from Monroe on November 5.

Dry weather in August brought the water level down on many lakes, ponds, and reservoirs and helped to produce some interesting inland shorebird sightings. Highlights included a Baird's Sandpiper and Short-billed Dowitcher in Enfield, a Red Phalarope in Piermont and two inland Ruddy Turnstones. Along the coast, shorebird numbers were about average, with another Red Phalarope reported from Star Island, and high numbers of Ruddy Turnstones reported from the offshore islands. The 60 Pectoral Sandpipers in Exeter is three times the highest total of the last ten falls.

Two Parasitic Jaegers reported from the coast were highly unusual for this pelagic species, and three individual Lesser Black-backed Gulls were reported from the area of the Turnkey Landfill in Rochester. This area has hosted one of the largest numbers of gulls in the state in recent years. A Laughing Gull on November 26 is probably the latest record for this species in over 20 years, and a Black-headed Gull on August 28 is early for this winter species.

The tremendous success of the tern restoration program on White and Seavey Islands is probably one of the big reasons why terns were so numerous along the coast this fall. The counts of Common and Roseate Terns during August and into the first week of September are unprecedented in the state in the last 20 years. These totals probably include some birds which nested on Seavey Island, and which were joined by migrating birds from farther north. The two inland reports of Common Terns from Manchester and Enfield are highly unusual for this coastal species. A total of seven species of terns was reported for the fall, including as many as nine Forster's Terns and a rare find of eight Caspian Terns in Hampton Harbor on September 4.

Alcids Through Starling

B anding data from southern Maine and Massachusetts showed that the fall of 1999 was a very productive one for migrant Northern Saw-whet Owls. A banding station in Freeport, Maine, had captured over 200 different birds by mid-October; however, these birds pass through New Hampshire unobtrusively, as is shown by only two New Hampshire reports for the fall. The Northern Saw-whet Owl reported from Star Island is unusual this far offshore; it ended up in the mist nets and was banded.

Common Nighthawks peaked in the three-day period from August 24-26, which is just about average for this explosive and punctual migrant. Six Red-bellied Woodpeckers and 11 Carolina Wrens were reported for the fall. These southern species continue to maintain small populations in southern New Hampshire after expanding their ranges from the south over the last ten years.

A migrant Gray-cheeked Thrush was carefully observed in Nashua on September 23. This enigmatic migrant from Canada poses a difficult identification problem with the very similar Bicknell's Thrush, which nests in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. The recent reclassification by the American Ornithologists' Union (see NHBR: Winter 1995-96) of the Gray-cheeked Thrush as a distinct species from the Bicknell's Thrush has confused our understanding of these two species' status as they migrate through the state.

Northern Shrikes had a good fall with their first invasion since 1995. Twenty-six birds were reported from throughout the state. Philadelphia Vireos were more commonly reported than in past years, with a very early bird banded on White Island on August 20. Eight Fish Crows is the most ever reported during a fall season, but not unexpected for this increasing species and from a traditional nesting location. Swallows were generally not well reported (only two Tree Swallows reported for the fall!). The most interesting report was a great count of 36 Northern Rough-winged Swallows from Seabrook on August 14 and rare off-shore sightings of Bank, Northern Rough-winged, and Cliff Swallows from Star Island. Late Cliff Swallows were once again reported by this editor, with one bird seen with a Barn Swallow on October 23.

Pipit Through Indigo Bunting

A n American Pipit photographed in Exeter on August 22 was about a month early for this migrant. Bohemian Waxwings had a good fall, with the biggest concentrations coming from the traditional locations near Plymouth State College. The ornamental fruit trees around the campus make this one of the most reliable spots to find this elusive nomadic species.

Warblers were generally not well reported. A few groups of migrants were noted, including a mixed flock of about 35 birds feeding on the ground near the Prescott Farm Audubon Center in Laconia. The most interesting warblers, however, came from Star Island, where Rebecca Suomala had been banding birds as part of her research work. The Black-throated Gray Warbler she reported from the island was well documented with photographs and descriptions and constitutes the state's first documented record for this species in the state. The 31 Yellow-breasted Chats banded on the island during the fall are a remarkable total for this rare southern species; however, the Yellow-breasted Chat found in the clutches of a cat in Berlin on October 1 is an exceptional sighting for this far north in the state.

Sparrows, Blackbirds, and Finches

Sparrows were generally unremarkable for the fall, with average numbers and dates. The exception was a tremendous flock of Dark-eyed Juncos in the vicinity of the fairgrounds in Sandwich. The total of 500 is the highest fall total reported in many years. Once again, Nelson's Sharp-tailed Sparrow reports were received from the coast during October, but insufficient documentation was submitted to allow for publication. This is a species that is still poorly known and requires thorough documentation. Out on Star Island, reports of Lark Sparrow, Clay-colored Sparrow, and Dickcissel were received for the fall with photographs or documentation. These species may be annual out on the islands but are rarely reported because of a lack of coverage.

Only two Bobolinks were reported for the fall, while other blackbirds were reported in average numbers. A rare Yellow-headed Blackbird in Milford on September 22 was one of the more interesting reports for the fall.

Common Redpolls and Pine Siskins began an irruptive winter with good numbers of reports from throughout the state in October and November. Evening Grosbeaks were well reported, but none of these reached the southeastern portion of the state. Scattered reports were received for Red Crossbills and Pine Grosbeaks, but no major movements were noted. The only White-winged Crossbills reported for the season came from Rye on November 7, where two were feeding on the ground for a happy group of birders on an ASNH field trip.

Bird Banding Summary

Star Island, Fall 1999

by Rebecca Suomala

The bird banding project on Star Island, Isles of Shoals, which began in the spring of 1999, resumed in August for the fall migration. This study is part of my research on the stopover behavior of neotropical migrants, and the station is open only during migration. Please see the Spring 99 issue of New Hampshire Bird Records for more information on the project.

For the fall season the station was open from August 16 through September 30. The conferences were in full session and many visitors to the banding station were thrilled to see the birds "up close." Most of them were very surprised to learn how many different kinds of birds could be found on Star.

We banded just over 1300 birds for the season, but the daily totals were wildly erratic. We had a dismal run of south winds that brought nine consecutive days with 13 or fewer new birds banded. When the winds finally changed, we were deluged, and on September 12 we had our biggest day, with 142 birds banded. It was a record for the station, and I was grateful to have both Dan Hayward and Mark Suomala helping for the day. Of course, given that we were swamped with birds and constantly processing, that was the day we caught the Dickcissel - we hardly had time to enjoy it! Hurricane Floyd closed the station for two days but did not bring the exciting birds we had hoped would be blown in by the storm. Later in September, Dan Hayward and I had two back-to-back days of over 130 birds. Whew! But those two days also brought two spectacular birds. One was a Merlin in the last round of the day. The other was a very special Northern Saw-whet Owl – my personal highlight of the banding year.

Other highlights from the fall included a Belted Kingfisher in the net. These birds don't usually get caught in mist nets, so this was a great surprise. We were also shocked to capture a total of 31 Yellow-breasted Chats. For rarities, we added a Clay-colored Sparrow to the banding list, but the rarest bird for the fall was a Black-throated Gray Warbler that we saw but did not band (see the front cover).

Thanks to the wonderful crew of volunteers who helped in the fall and to the project sponsors, the Star Island Corporation and the Audubon Society of New Hampshire.

Star Island Fall 1999 Banding Totals

These totals are preliminary and will be finalized after the data have been computerized.

Lark Sparrow	1	8/25
Red Phalarope	1	9/17 (aftermath of Hurricane Floyd)
Black-throated Gray Warbler	1	9/21 & 9/22

possibly a first state record (see p. 2)

In addition, this effort would not be possible without the help of the bird-banding volunteers at the Appledore Island banding station, which is supported in part by the Shoals Marine Laboratory. I would also like to recognize the many donors who gave to the project in memory of Harry C. McDade.

The 1999 Autumn Hawk Migration

by Susan A. Fogleman

Over nineteen thousand five hundred hawks were recorded migrating through New Hampshire skies during Fall 1999. More than 400 hours were logged in consecutive-day monitoring at four of the sites listed in the accompanying table. Project Hawktrack Coordinators Iain MacLeod and Susan Fogleman have selected certain strategically located sites across the state for concentrated attention. In 1999, those sites covered daily were Weeks State Park, with 86.5 hours; Little Round Top, with 114; Pack Monadnock, with 76.3; and Blue Job, with 74. An additional 50 hours were invested in Deering, 27 at Odiorne, and 6.5 at Interlakes Elementary School in Meredith. It is hoped that coverage will continue to increase at these and other sites next fall. See the table for species and numbers of hawks recorded.

Congratulations to our northernmost team at Weeks as they added to our growing body of knowledge about hawk migration in the northeast. Dedicated volunteers there have built an impressive hawkwatch platform on the north side of the Prospect Mtn. Summit, which facilitates the study of migration in the upper Connecticut River Valley. It is suspected that hawks passing out of Quebec's eastern townships may have been slipping unnoticed through northwestern New Hampshire. Reactivating watch efforts in the West Lebanon area would augment the attempt by the Weeks team to fill the huge gaps in our knowledge about flights west of the White Mountains.

Last year, we reiterated a call for more time invested at Blue Job Mountain in Farmington/Strafford. We have long held the belief that because of its location in the center of the New Hampshire/Maine coastal plain, Blue Job may be the most important site in the state. At a Project Hawktrack volunteer workshop in early September, several folks answered the call. The dedication of Joe and Barb LaBelle, Star Snyder, and several others enabled the collection of data which are already lending support to our hypothesis. In previous years, observers have had to leave the site before any late-afternoon flight could be recorded. This year saw excellent full-day commitment by the enthusiastic team assembled at the site. And their investment paid off "big time!" Here's an encapsulation of the events surrounding that payoff:

A low pressure system moving offshore was followed by a cold front with moderately strong northwest airflow on the 18th of September. This "steered" birds that had been travelling down the "hawk highway" northeast of us over toward the coast, where Odiorne and sites in Maine recorded nearly 2500 that day. A few days preceding the arrival of this system the region experienced southerly vectored breezes, then rain, so since September 14 and 15, no big numbers had been seen anywhere. On those days, Little Round Top and Rumford (Maine) counters saw good flights totalling over 4800 hawks on the easterly component winds that favor those sites. Then, on September 19, with the cold front well to the east, the center of a high pressure system settled over the area, producing excellent thermal activity across the coastal plain. As predicted, such a situation should favor Blue Job, and did it ever! Nearly 7800 hawks passed the eestatic watchers there that day. To the west/southwest, Deering and Pack Monadnock benefitted as well, tallying over 2500 birds between them. Several other good (albeit smaller) flights in addition to that impressive one put Blue Job's seasonal hph (hawks per hour) count at 120!

Little Round Top logged a respectable 46 hph for the season. Pack Monadnock and Deering averaged about 36. Because the conditions that produce flights of the more coastal migrants are fairly predictable, Odiorne site leaders selected only certain watch days: two days each in September and October and one day in early November. Investing 25.5 hours for the entire season yielded Odiorne watchers 37.8 hph. Had they been able to invest more time, their efforts would no doubt have been more greatly rewarded, as other coastal sites just "upstream" from them in Maine recorded excellent numbers of birds this fall.

For a complete list of Hawk Watch sites in New Hampshire and how to reach them, contact Iain MacLeod at the Massabesic Audubon Center at 668-2045, or send a SASE to Susan Fogleman, RR #1 Box 2011, Plymouth NH 03264. If you'd like to contribute your efforts to this important data-gathering effort, let Iain or Susan know. A workshop for volunteers will be held in early September. For more information on hawkwatching, check the following websites: www.hmana.org, and www.virtualbirder.com/ (at this site you will need to click on a link pertaining to hawkwatching.)

And don't forget - those hawks return in the spring! Watches are ongoing at Peaked Hill (Little Round Top's companion site) near Bristol every April, with occasional watching at other sites such as Odiorne, Deering, Pawtuckaway State Park, and Blue Job. Spring affords an excellent opportunity to witness dramatic courtship displays.

Keep looking up!

Birding Locally:

Rochester's Hanson Pines

by Scott Richardson

Hanson Pines City Park in Rochester first drew my notice as a big blotch of green in the DeLorme Atlas. I had hoped to discover a suitable space for birding within a short walk of my downtown apartment. That green patch held promise, and my first visit was encouraging.

It was almost autumn, and, after many years away, I was attempting to relearn my New England birds. Sloppy trills slipped from the treetops. Those dispassionate notes, sweet as they were, brought to mind nothing more specific than warbler, so I sought the song makers on high. Eventually the auditory clues, along with one or two close-up views of muted plumage, ended my confusion: Aha! Pine Warblers. Perfectly appropriate for this pine stand.

The warblers were joined by a heartwarming assemblage of typical woodland species, so I decided to make a habit of the hike to Hanson Pines. I walked through the park weekly from late August into December, typically on pleasant midweek mornings. Usually I spent a couple of hours – longer during warbler passage and shorter after the October sparrow waves ceased – and often had the park mostly to myself.

I encountered 48 species in 19 visits during the autumn reporting period and could have added more had my warbler skills not withered from neglect. I eventually identified five warbler species in addition to the Pines: Black-throated Blue, Black-and-white, Magnolia, Yellow-rumped, and Northern Parula. Other delightful finds included cardinals, catbirds, creepers, and two kinds of vireo, Red-eyed and Blue-headed. As the season progressed, I was treated to two nuthatch species and both kinglets. Phoebes remained in the woods through mid-October. When they left, Hermit Thrushes temporarily filled the void. My sparrow list held half-adozen species, including Lincoln's and Swamp. Flyover finches drew my eyes skyward, forcing me to find gaps in the pines. Through those openings, sometimes, I spied a circling gull or accipiter. The park's position at the edge of the slow Cocheco River assured me of seeing Mallards, Wood Ducks, American Black Ducks, and, regularly, a kingfisher.

Telecommunications Towers and Bird Mortality

by Francie Von Mertens

As telecommunications towers multiply across the landscape, concern is growing about their impact –literally – on migrating birds. By law, towers higher than 200' require aviation safety lights. It is these warning lights that seem to be causing the problem. Monitoring of towers for bird kills is spotty, especially in recent years, but reports from around the country include this sampling:

- At a 1,010-foot tower near Tallahassee, Florida, a count of 42,386 dead birds (190 species) during a 25-year study period ending in 1980;
- During migration seasons, 1957-94, a count of 121,560 dead birds (123 species) at a 1,000-foot tower in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, including 30,000 on one night alone;
- On January 22, 1998, 50,000-100,000 Lapland Longspurs were killed at a 420-foot tower in Kansas;
- During September 18-27, 1975, 1,057 birds (39 species) were killed at a 1,085-foot tower in Youngstown, Ohio. Of that total, 30% were Ovenbirds.

According to a North Dakota study conducted by M. Avery, P.F. Springer, and J.F. Cassel, and reported in the Auk, migrants actively avoid tower areas during clear nights. However, "the refraction of light by moisture droplets in the air on cloudy nights greatly increases the illuminated space around a tower, and the migrants are arrested within a lighted area that they are reluctant to leave. As they mill about, collisions with the structure and other birds may result in mass mortality."

In a study conducted by W. Cochran and R. Graber at a 984-foot tower in Illinois, swarms of birds disoriented within the tower's light zone dispersed when researchers turned off the tower lights.

According to one theory, while birds are not attracted to the light, once they come within the zone, their navigational cues misfire. Accustomed to maintaining a certain angle with a celestial light source so as to maintain a steady course, once birds are within the light zone, they begin circling to maintain that constant angle and to maintain contact with the light.

Bill Evans, a consulting researcher at Cornell's Laboratory of Ornithology, has recorded avian distress calls in what he calls the "little tornado of birds" seemingly trapped within the light zone near a tower. He has been studying tower kills for 15 years and maintains a web page (www.towerkill.com ) that maps tower sites and reports research and relevant developments.

There are approximately 75,000 towers today, about half of which require aviation lights. That number is expected to double in the next decade. High-resolution (digital) television as mandated by Congress will require construction of over 1,000 towers nationwide that are over 1,000 feet high.

Recognizing the problem, in 1998 the American Ornithologists' Union, the Association of Field Ornithologists, and the Cooper and Wilson Ornithological Societies approved a resolution of concern that urged U.S. Fish and Wildlife to work with the FAA and FCC to study the problem and assess the need for a national environmental impact statement (EIS); one year prior, the National Audubon Society petitioned for an EIS for the towers required for the switchover to digital television. Among suggestions offered to lessen mortality are co-location, whereby facilities are combined at one site; lowering tower heights; conducting studies to test whether flashing red lights create a greater "trap" than white, as seems to be the case; engineering towers to require fewer guy wires; and siting towers so as to avoid major flyways.

The subject is slow in gaining the FCC's attention. The push to encourage telecommunications technology and business expansion is a strong one, with minimal local control or non-industry feedback built into the tower-permitting process. Word is spreading, however, along with a few court cases. As always, an informed citizenry (and birding community) is important.

Hanson Pines (more formally, Dominicus Hanson Park) is an enclave of older pines set aside as a public park in 1915. The evergreen canopy shelters a mix of deciduous trees and shrubs and a decent set of snags. Although wood-chip trails crisscrossing Hanson Pines make it easy to chase quick, tight flocks, I tended to stay on the outside loop, bisecting the park just once for better coverage. The southern point, right by the river, seemed best for warblers and other forest birds, while the eastern border, with its sandy, shrubby edge, was good for sparrows.

The park is adjacent to Spaulding High School, along State Route 125 (Wakefield Street), and can be accessed from east or west. The main parking lot is at the Hanson Pines playground, though parking there is limited when school is in session. There is more room available at the Rochester Community Center, across Wakefield Street from McDonald's. (Caution: The DeLorme street map errs in this area.) The park can also be approached from the west by turning off North Main Street onto Dewey Street and driving to the end, where a footbridge leads directly into the pines. The bridge provides a good vantage point not only for birds, but for river otters, muskrats, chipmunks, squirrels, and some sort of day-flying bat, too.

Hanson Pines was a wonderful place to refresh and create memories of fall birding in New England. Even as I look forward to another autumn in those pines, I find myself wondering what they're like in spring.

Scott Richardson has been active in cooperative bird monitoring and endangered species management. He now resides just a few hundred meters from New Hampshire in Berwick, Maine.
